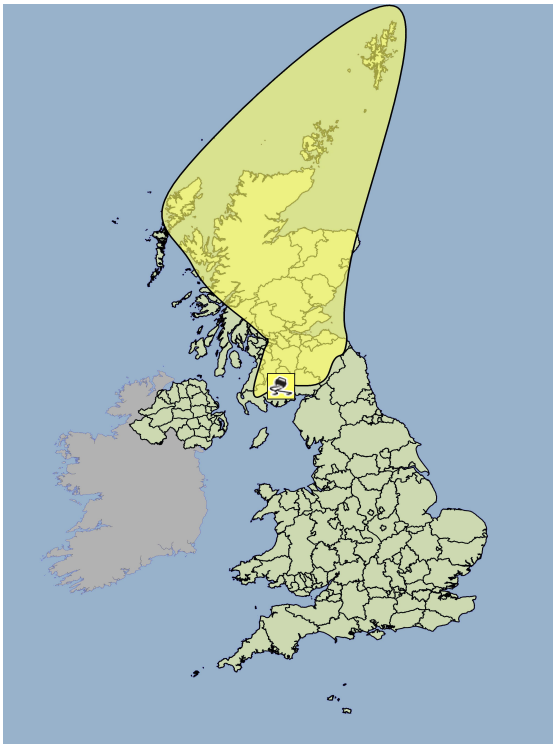
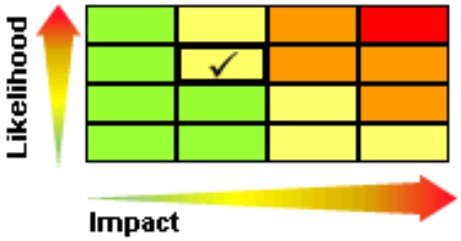
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Showers will continue to affect the west of Scotland overnight Sunday and into Monday. Road temperatures will fall below freezing where skies clear between showers. This will allow icy stretches to form. Further east there is still the risk of risk of icy stretches on roads which have been wet by today's showers. On the higher routes in the west, above 200 metres, snow accumulations of 1-2cm are expected by Monday morning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 18:00 on Sun, 22nd Dec 2013 until 09:00 on Mon, 23rd Dec 2013

Clearing skies during this evening, after today's showers, will allow road temperatures to dip below freezing which will lead to some icy stretches. Further wintry showers are expected to parts of Highland, Argyll and Western Central where there could be 1-2cm of snow on the highest routes.

Drivers should be aware of the risk of difficult driving conditions due to ice and snow and the possibility of some minor travel disruption.
